GOOGLE FACES RECORD 3 BILLION EURO EU ANTI-TRUST FINE: TELEGRAPH

1 Google faces a record antitrust fine of around 3 billion euros ($3.4 billion) from the European Commission in the coming weeks, British newspaper The Sunday Telegraph said. The European Union has accused Google of promoting its shopping service in Internet searches at the expense of rival services in a case that has dragged on since late 2010. Several people familiar with the matter told Reuters last month they believed that after three failed attempts at a compromise in the past six years Google now had no plans to try to settle the allegations unless the EU watchdog changed its stance. ISLAMIC STATE ATTACKS GAS PLANT NORTH OF BAGHDAD, KILLING 11

2 An Islamic State attack on a state-run gas plant in Baghdad's northern outskirts on Sunday killed at least 11 people, including policemen, and forced two power stations it supplied to suspend electricity production. A suicide car bomb went off at the entrance of the facility in Taji, allowing another vehicle carrying at least six attackers with explosive vests to enter and clash with security forces, police sources said. Twenty-one people were also wounded. The militant group said in an online statement that four fighters with machine guns had killed the guards at the plant which it said the Iraqi army was using as a headquarters. When reinforcements arrived, they set off a parked car bomb before clashing with the security forces and detonating their suicide vests. REUTERS

KERRY MEETS SAUDI KING TO DISCUSS SYRIA BEFORE VIENNA TALKS

3 Secretary of State John Kerry met Saudi Arabia's King Salman in Jeddah on Sunday to discuss the fragile truce in Syria, before broader talks with Russia, Iran and other countries in Vienna on Tuesday. Kerry has said he hopes to strengthen a "cessation of hostilities" agreement between Syrian government forces and rebels, which has been undermined by fighting in some areas, and to increase humanitarian aid deliveries to besieged areas.
On Friday, he said the meetings with the king and the Saudi interior and defense ministers a — the two most senior princes — would try "to make sure that we can get this cessation better footed and, frankly, better observed and implemented throughout the country." REUTERS

BACK FROM THE WEATHER DEAD ... WITH APOLOGIES

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

On Dec. 23, 2011, I faded to black.

It's a television term that means basically an ending of a show, or, in my case, the ending of one's television career. Fox TV and I parted ways on that day as I rode off into weather oblivion, never to be seen again on local television news.

It was painful and scary, as I was transported into an unknown abyss. It was a pure free-fall with no parachute, no ripcord, just a fall straight down from what at one time was the very highest of meteorological mountains.

I had achieved my childhood dream, after having set the bar very high by aspiring to one day become the meteorologist on CBS-TV in New York on the 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. newscasts.

I lived the dream and more. I considered myself very blessed and fortunate, this kid who came from nothing, bad neighborhood, no money, just a dream.

The executive who helped pave my way to New York also led me back to Fox television in Philadelphia. His name is Dennis Swanson, the president of station operations for Fox television station groups.

When my career unceremoniously ended, I felt not only had I let myself down, I had let down my daughter, my newsroom, respected colleagues, fans (I had a few), but especially Dennis for failing as a trusted newsroom leader.

For this I apologize, as I have nobody to blame but myself. Sometimes you just need to listen and keep your mouth shut. I failed miserably at that.

Fox, NBC and CBS all gave this kid an opportunity of a lifetime to live out my dream and for this I will always be grateful and now humbled.

You might be wondering why I'm bringing all this up now. Well, this past week I filled in on an upstart TV news station located in New Jersey called SNJ Today News. It opened up a flood of memories, as it sent me back in time when I was simply ecstatic just to be in a newsroom. It took me back to my roots. It reminded me just how much I miss it.

Sometimes I wish I was that kid from Long Island who had this dream. ... Those were the best days of my life.

Overtime crackdown at the MBTA is paying off

Absenteeism cut by more than a third as transportation agency enforces stricter time-off policy.

SPENCER BUELL
spencer.buell@metro.us

The number of dropped bus trips has declined since January by 40 percent, according to a new report on a management crackdown at the MBTA. METRO FILE

A crackdown has reined in T employees' absenteeism and overtime, containing the city transportation agency's costs in the first third of 2016, according to a new report to be released Monday.

The aggressive campaign to train managers and institute a strict new time-off policy in place since January has paid off, MBTA Chief Administrator Brian Shortsleeve will tell the T's oversight board at its Monday meeting.

"We had a big problem with absenteeism and the T had a pervasive culture that lacked accountability," Shortsleeve said in an interview Sunday, adding, "I think the results you've seen in the last 120 days indicate that we're on the right track."

Overtime costs are down by an average of 27.5 percent per day compared to the daily average last year, the report says. In the first third of this year, the T paid $112,000 per day in overtime, compared with $154,000 per day on average last year.

Absenteeism among employees who drive trains and buses is down 33.5 percent over last year's average, and the average number of dropped trips per day on buses is down 40 percent to 93, according to the report.

Absenteeism and overtime are related problems, Shortsleeve said. When an employee is out, someone else needs to be paid overtime to cover their shift, and costs go up.

Much of the reduction has come from increasing the burden on employees looking for days off — among them having managers sign off on requests directly, requiring doctor's notes as proof for sick days, and keeping a close watch on overtime spending month-to-month. More than 900 managers have gone through a new time-off training program, he said.

"If folks are out on [family and medical leave] or are out for the right reasons, that we understand," Shortsleeve said. "For folks that may be historically abusing the system, that's not going to happen anymore."

For now, Shortsleeve said the T is on track to reach its goal of cutting overtime expenses by 25 percent in 2016. The T paid $56.3 million in overtime in 2015.

He said the plan is to invest savings back into repairing and replacing the old and worn equipment on the aging system, chipping away at its $7 billion state of good repair backlog.

The T also has plans to work with a third-party to manage time-off requests and is "very close to signing a contract," he said.

All of this comes after audits of the system this year have identified issues with employee management, and after news emerged that a track maintenance worker's pay had been padded with 2,600 hours of overtime in 2015.

James O'Brien, president of the Boston Carmen's Union, has repeatedly pointed to what he calls understaffing at the T as a cause for overtime spending.

T employees have not been accused of breaking the law, and the audits have found no evidence of fraud.

Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack addressed the management policy update briefly in a Sunday morning interview with WBZ's Jon Keller.

"We weren't managing our workforce and our workforce was taking advantage of us," Pollack said. "And that's changed."

More than a thousand students walked out of school and rallied in Boston in March to call for an increase in funding for schools. METRO FILE

BPS students planning follow-up walkout this week over school funding

Student leader expects the protest will be twice as large as the massive one in March.

SPENCER BUELL
spencer.buell@metro.us

Boston students are planning another walkout this week, a follow-up to a protest earlier this year that saw more than a thousand students leave class and march through the streets over budget cuts.

Organizers said Sunday they expect this week's demonstration are expecting it to be twice as large as the one in March, according to 18-year-old Jahi Spaloss, a leader of the protests.

"This time it's been much better organized and students have been encouraging each other to go," Spaloss, a senior at Boston Green Academy, said in an interview. "And not only that, but we'll be more well-informed than last time."

The students plan to walk out of class at 1 p.m., he said, then meet at City Hall at 2 p.m., where Spaloss said he would be among the students who plan to testify at a meeting of Boston's City Council.

He and other students oppose what they call the underfunding of Boston Public Schools, cuts to programming and the possibility of closing or merging schools in the city.

In the lead-up to the event, organizers have been waging a social media campaign.

A video posted to Facebook on Sunday to rally supporters had been shared nearly 150 times by the early evening.

At least 1,000 people said on a Facebook event page that they would attend the walkout.

Spaloss insists the protest is being organized by young people, firing back at criticisms of the protest lobbed at students by Mayor Mary Walsh, who suggested the young organizers had been helped and egged on by adults.

"Ninety-nine percent of the people who are helping out with this are students," he said.

He said some unionized teachers would be at the rally in solidarity, and said they would also play a peacekeeping role in the crowd.

Student leaders will also be walking among protesters in groups of two to keep an eye on protesters, he said, and legal advocates from the National Lawyers Guild will be there to observe any interactions between the students and police.

"This is not just an excuse to get out of school early," he said, "but to get your voices to be heard."

Netanyahu tells France's Ayrault he still opposes peace conference

Palestinians welcomed the proposal but Israel is concerned that the conference that France seeks to hold in the autumn would try to dictate terms for a peace deal.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told France's foreign minister on Sunday that Israel remained opposed to a French initiative for an international conference to try to revive peace talks.

In public remarks to his cabinet after meeting France's Jean-Marc Ayrault, Netanyahu said: "I told him the only way to advance genuine peace between us and the Palestinians is through direct negotiations between us and them, without preconditions."

Israel made the same argument in the formal response it gave last month. France hopes an international conference would set out a framework for peace negotiations, after U.S. efforts to broker a two-state deal collapsed in April 2014.

"I know that Netanyahu does not agree (to the French proposal)," Ayrault told reporters after his talks with the Israeli leader in Jerusalem and a meeting with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas in the occupied West Bank.

Ayrault said France would continue to pursue the initiative and that its ultimate goal was for both sides to return to direct talks, with international intervention laying the groundwork.

"It is very clear to us, and I said this today to both the prime minister and to President Abbas, that we cannot take the place of the two parties," he said at Tel Aviv's Ben-Gurion airport at the end of a one-day visit to promote the plan.

"Only they can conduct direct negotiations to achieve a solution," Ayrault said. "But because things are currently stuck ... external intervention is necessary to provide renewed momentum."

An international gathering of ministers, tentatively planned for May 30 in Paris, is set to include the Middle East Quartet (the United States, Russia, the European Union and the United Nations), the Arab League, the U.N. Security Council and about 20 countries, without Israeli or Palestinian participation. REUTERS

Suspicious package found during Premier League match in England

A bomb disposal team carried out a controlled explosion on a suspect device — later described as not viable — inside Manchester United's stadium on Sunday after the club's English Premier League match against Bournemouth was abandoned.

Two of the Old Trafford stands were evacuated about 20 minutes before the scheduled kickoff at 2 p.m. GMT on discovery of the suspicious package. Soon after, the game was called off and the whole 75,000-seater stadium cleared.

Police investigated the package and used sniffer dogs to search the area, before calling in an army bomb disposal unit. TV footage showed fire engines arriving at the stadium.

"Bomb disposal experts carried out controlled explosion at Old Trafford on what is described as incredibly lifelike explosive device," Greater Manchester Police said later on Twitter.

Security checks are made at Old Trafford in Manchester, England. GETTY IMAGES

"Full assessment now concluded and found device wasn't viable. A full search of the stadium is ongoing."

On Wednesday Britain raised the threat level from dissident Northern Ireland militants to "substantial," meaning an attack on the British mainland is considered a strong possibility.

Manchester United said in a statement on its website the package had been found in the North West Quadrant, and the match abandoned on police advice.

"We don't make these decisions lightly and we have done this today to ensure the safety of all those attending," Assistant Chief Constable John O'Hare said in a statement.

United cannot qualify for next season's Champions League, after Manchester City drew at Swansea City on Sunday. They are sixth in the Premier League table and would move above Southampton into fifth with a draw or victory against Bournemouth.

They play Crystal Palace in the FA Cup final on Saturday and it is not clear when a rescheduled game against Bournemouth, its final Premier League match of the season, will be played.

In a statement posted on Twitter, the Premier League said it would seek to rearrange the fixture "as soon as practically possible."

"When it comes to matters of security it is obviously right that Manchester United and the Premier League place the safety of supporters and employees foremost," it said. REUTERS

Mariah Carey displays classic Mariah Carey behavior

That's our Mariah! Infamous diva Mariah Carey was up to her old tricks at the GLAAD Media Awards this weekend, where she was honored with a prestigious award. According to Radar Online, her outrageous behavior included showing up one and a half hours late because "the red carpet had to be clear of all other celebrities," a source says. But once it was appropriately clear, she wasn't done with her demands. "She told a reporter that they had to move the camera to catch her 'good side,'" the source adds. Now, that doesn't seem right. I can't imagine Carey considering any side of her not good.

Ruby Rose gets rowdy in New Orleans

"Orange is the New Black" star Ruby Rose got herself kicked out of a New Orleans restaurant after her method of registering her displeasure at the speed of service didn't go over too well. Oddly, restaurant workers aren't the biggest fans of having french fries chucked at them while on the job. Weird, right? "She was having a tantrum. She was awful," the owner of the Rebellion Bar and Urban Kitchen tells NOLA.com. "She was a horrible person." Rose and friends were apparently seated at the bar and were not happy about how long it was taking for their food and drinks to arrive, so she chucked some fries at a passing bartender.

"He thought maybe it was an accident, so he came back and he asked, 'Is everything OK?' And she picked up a handful of french fries and threw them at him," the owner explained. "I think she was like … trying to be a bully."

Ellen makes 'Lemonade'

Sure, "Lemonade" was great, but maybe you weren't watching closely and missed the Ellen DeGeneres cameo. In case you did, the talk show host has this clip of her just chilling in an El Camino while Beyonce sings "Hold Up" and strolls down the sidewalk. "I think she hates cars," DeGeneres observes on the phone. "Becky, I'm going to have to call you back. But I do love what you're doing with your hair. It looks great." Speaking of Becky, keep watching for a very surprising cameo.

Kit Harington dishes on love life

We finally know something. "Game of Thrones" star Kit Harington and his girlfriend, former co-star Rose Leslie, have generally been press shy about their romance, but I guess now that Harington's character — spoiler alert! — has been brought back from the dead, he's ginned up some more publicity. He told Vogue Italia about why filming Season 2 in Iceland was his favorite experience. "Because the country is beautiful, because the Northern Lights are magical, and because it was there that I fell in love," he said. "If you're already attracted to someone and then they play your love interest … it becomes very easy to fall in love."

That time J.Law tried to dance her way into 'Star Wars'

Maybe you've forgotten about how Jennifer Lawrence is your adorably awkward best friend hidden inside a beautiful Oscar-winning movie star, but luckily she has a brand new anecdote to remind you. Lawrence told Graham Norton during a visit to his talk show about the time she was at an event and spotted a table that included J.J. Abrams and Harrison Ford. "I was like, 'Be right back guys, I'm going to say hi to the "Star Wars" dudes,'" she says, describing how she approached their table and began dancing super-awkwardly. Which apparently didn't go over so well. "The whole table was just like [dumbfounded]. And so I realized while I was dancing, they had no idea who I am. So I turned around and walked back," she says, adding that she "humiliated myself more than I ever have before." Well, for now, at least.

matt.prigge@metro.us

Jack O'Connell is a fan of New York but not so much Wall Street. He doesn't mean all the greed monsters down there, though they don't come off well in his new film, which is in fact called "Money Monster." The English actor refers to how the combination of high traffic and the narrowing tail of the island can actually be dangerous when someone is in need of ambulances and fire trucks, which he noticed while filming there.

"You'd see these emergency services forced to cut through the streets we blocked off, fire trucks taking a U-turn, having a nosy," O'Connell says, dropping in some homeland slang. "It was slightly disturbing."

"Money Monster" is O'Connell's second big Hollywood movie, after a series of electric turns in movies back home. He scored raves in the prison drama "Starred Up" and in the IRA thriller "'71." The turns were strong enough that Angelina Jolie took a chance, casting the relative unknown as Olympiad-turned-POW Louis Zamperini in "Unbroken."

That role is quite different from O'Connell's early work, which saw him typecast as aggro delinquents, in films like "This Is England" and the show "Skins." Just as he's been trying to stay well-behaved, following a youth spent being self-destructive on the off-hours, O'Connell is adamant about stretching his legs.

"My respect for actors comes when I see them really pushing themselves and performing out of their comfort zones," O'Connell says. "I admire character actors. Speaking selfishly, I consider myself quite observant. Ideally I'd like to establish myself as someone who can be unique and change my strengths."

"Money Monster" — which finds him directed by another actress-turned-filmmaker, Jodie Foster — is another angry role: He plays Kyle, a working-class New Yorker who's lost all his money on a stock recommendation from George Clooney's Lee Gates, a Jim Cramer-type with his own popular (and often reckless) investment show. Kyle is so desperate he crashes a live show, armed with a gun and bombs, wanting to expose corruption on Wall Street. For O'Connell it meant spending most of the shoot frazzled and shouty, though also vulnerable — a regular guy in way over his head.

GETTY IMAGES

"Kyle enters the movie with a lot of energy. He's coming from a desperate place. I had to stay true to that vocally, to get to a place where I felt I could improvise with a foreign dialect," he says, referring to his very thick Central England accent. (He's from Derby.) "That was a huge challenge, because the movie required a bit of freedom and spontaneity in places.

"There's a difference between impersonating as an actor and trying to do something that feels lived-in," he says. "I won't settle for anything less than the letter there."

O'Connell earned a lot of acclaim for "Unbroken," which went on to be one of 2014's highest grossers. To American viewers — and Hollywood execs — he was still a newbie, despite his long CV in the U.K. What kinds of films was he being offered right after?

"Typically the roles you really want aren't the ones you get offered," O'Connell says. "People would offer you obvious choices that aren't risky in terms of casting. When I reflect on my body of work, it's going to have to be diverse and interesting. And those opportunities aren't easy to come by. It can still be a little frustrating — but if it's worth doing it's not going to be easy, is it?"

Get it Together

DJ Laidback Luke at a previous festival. NICK MINIERI

We ask the annual festival co-founder for his event picks.

LINDA LABAN
letters@metro.us

Together Boston kicked off its seventh year of uniting music, art and technology in a week-long, citywide celebration of DJ and club culture, running through May 22. Cruelly, we asked co-founder Alex Maniatis to choose his top three unmissable events from a week of top-notch workshops, tech demonstrations and concerts.

Fatima Yamaha PROVIDED

Dutch Culture Day with Dekmantel and Fatima Yamaha

"We are over-the-moon excited about the caliber of talent visiting Boston for Together 2016," says Maniatis. "The Dutch Culture Day on the Monday [May 16] is presented by Dutch Culture USA and will feature a cultural exchange at MMMMAVEN during the day and a party showcasing the massive Dutch festival/brand Dekmantel at night at the Middlesex Lounge. Do not to miss Dutch boy wonder Fatima Yamaha. Yamaha wrote the catchiest song I've ever heard, called 'What's a Girl To Do.'"

The Black Madonna brings Smart Bar chic to the Middlesex Lounge

"Though the week has many surprises, classic house and techno lovers should take note that the Tuesday night show at the Middlesex will feature Chicago's The Black Madonna [Marea Stamper], who is a big figure in the Midwest dance scene," says Maniatis. "She booked the famous Smart Bar for many years, but more recently her productions and DJ sets have really taken off. We have seen her come to Boston and leave dance floors absolutely sweaty and wanting more. This one is for the music heads — a true classic dance floor experience."

Maniatis

Together Central Stage at The Middle East with Matthew Dear, JPhlip and Axel Boman

"Last, but not least, are our events at The Middle East, which is known throughout the world for its rich history in live music," Maniatis concludes. "It will be transformed by the Together team into Together Central Stage with a/v installations and reinforced sound, truly creating a unique experience for Boston: Specifically on Saturday [May 21], when three of the world's top DJs are all on the one bill: Headlining the show is one of my favorite people and favorite DJs, Matthew Dear; one of Boston's favorites, San Francisco's JPhlip; and special guest Axel Boman from Sweden, making his Boston debut, complete out the night."

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Facing your interview fears

Understanding the subtext of these classic questions can put you more at ease.

ALIZAH SALARIO
alizah.salario@metro.us

Acing an interview requires preparation, self-awareness and confidence. This we know. So why is it that so many people approach interviews as if they were interrogations and wind up flopping around like a fish out of water?

"People often leave [interviews] feeling like they weren't prepared, or as though they didn't come off in the best light," says James Reed, the chairman of the U.K.-based recruitment firm Reed and the author of "Why You?: 101 Job Interview Questions You'll Never Fear Again."

Reed says decades of working with recruiters taught him to identify classic interview questions — and the unspoken intentions behind them. In his book, Reed identifies 15 classic questions. (If you're prepared for these, he says you should be able to slay the other 86.)

Reed analyzed three key questions, and offered his advice on acing your next interview.

1 "Tell me about yourself"

Hands down, this is the most common question recruiters will ask. "It's a big, open question, and on the face of it, it's not a threatening question. But what it does is it separates the people who have prepared from the people who have not," says Reed. "The real question is, 'Who do you think you are, and do you know what to leave in and what to leave out?'"

Reed suggests keeping the answer 90 percent professional and 10 percent personal. It should be thought through beforehand, and structured as a "short, sort of pithy, memorable answer."

Says Reed, "If you've got that prepared, and if you give it at the very beginning of the interview, then you've got off to a good start. It gets the conversation is running."

2 "What are your weaknesses?"

Warning: This is not an opportunity to divulge your deepest fears and neuroses.

Instead, says Reed, "in answering this question, you can reflect on what you have to bring in a more sensible way. The important thing is to level with the interviewer. I've had people say things like 'chocolate,' but I wouldn't recommend that because it doesn't carry the conversation forward."

Reed suggests thinking of weaknesses as "the flipside of strengths."

"If I were to answer, I would say I was impatient. Which can be a strength if you're trying to get things done, but if you're involved in a negotiation, it's certainly a weakness. It's about having a degree of self-awareness," says the expert.

3 "Why do you want to work here?"

On the face of it, this is an ego-stroking question that gives you an opening to wax about how much you have to offer. But keep in mind it's not really about you.

"A lot of people forget a job is a problem to be solved. You should be thinking about how you get the job done."

First, says Reed, make sure you've done your research. Know what needs to be done, and know how your unique background can help achieve that. Then get specific by "reflecting the job spec in every aspect of your answer."

Above all, remember: An interview isn't a chance for you to regurgitate your credentials. It's a chance to tell recruiters something they don't know.

Says Reed, "An interviewer has your résumé. They've seen your qualifications, they've seen what you've done. They don't know much yet about your personality. They want to find out more about your character. And as much as they want to find the right person, you want to find the right job."

Next time you interview, go in thinking "Why not me?"

Enjoy your weekend.

Life hacks for first-time job seekers

Because looking for a job is a job in itself.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

First-time job seekers face a classic employment Catch-22: You need experience to qualify for most jobs, but how do you get experience if you can't qualify for a job?

Newbies, don't fret.

Take solace in the fact everyone started somewhere. Here are a few hacks to make an inherently stressful process just a little easier.

We know. There's never anything to wear to work. ISTOCK

Problem: You have nothing to wear to an interview

Solution: Wardrobe starter kits from Of Mercer

In theory, putting together a fabulous outfit for an interview is no sweat. In practice, the word "outfit" makes you break out in hives.

If you don't have money to invest in a full work wardrobe (and why would you? You don't have a job) consider one of Of Mercer's three starter kits at escalating price points: The Intern, The Graduate (Business Casual) and The Graduate (Business Formal).

Each kit comes with a classic dress available in different colors, and a few key accessories. Choose from a cardigan or blazer, and earrings and a card case.

Problem: You hate looking for a job

Solution: Job search apps

The job search requires multiple applications, sometimes over a long period of time. Want to streamline the process and apply for multiple openings at once? There's an app for that — actually, there are lots of them. If you're still in school, LinkedIn students might be the way to go. There are also tons of apps like Switch, JobSnap and Jobr that mirror Tinder's approach and allow job seekers to connect directly with employers. Look who's multitasking now!

Problem: You don't meet all the job requirements

Solution: Cram with online tutorials

Job specs that read like short stories are not uncommon: Are you a self-starter who knows how to problem solve, code, create spreadsheets, climb mountains, speak Mandarian and make espresso? We kid, we kid. Sort of.

One way to keep a competitive edge while unemployed is to sign up for MOOCs (massive open online courses). These are generally free, credit-less and online only. Want to learn how to code? Use graphic design software? Earn your human resources certification? There's a MOOC for that.

The downside is there's no face-to-face interaction. The upside is a "massive" group of classmates from around the world you can ping for help. Search by university, instructor or certification (even Harvard has MOOCS).

Not only will brushing up on your skills make you more attractive to employers, it'll keep that noodle sharp. Welcome to the real word.

AINGE IS THE BEST GM IN SPORTS; BETTER THAN BELICHICK, BUFORD

Matt Burke is the National Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US.

Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro

It is arguable that Danny Ainge has completed two of the best NBA trades in this century. GETTY IMAGES

Danny Ainge is the best GM in sports.

Better than Bill Belichick. Better than R.C. Buford.

(Yes, I know neither Ainge or Belichick have the official title of GM – so spare me those emails. We all know the buck stops with each of them.)

Ainge tops my list of front office minds because he has completely rebuilt the Celtics twice now. The first rebuild resulted in one title, two trips to the NBA Finals and multiple trips to the Eastern Conference Finals. The second rebuild is already guaranteed to result in sustained trips to at least the conference finals as Ainge would have to turn into the absolute worst GM in sports overnight to screw this thing up now. The hardest part of rebuild No. 2 is over.

The 2013 Nets trade seemed like a fleecing at the time, but it's even better than originally imagined. The Celtics own Brooklyn's pick this year but also next year, and the year after that. The Nets are going to continue to be one of the worst teams in the league these next couple of years, so the C's will continue to reap the benefits of that swap.

What makes Ainge so great is that he adapts better than anyone. He's not afraid to change his plan on the fly.

He could have traded Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce much earlier than he did, but he didn't like the offers he was getting. He waited and waited and waited for a team to panic, and the Nets eventually obliged. I remember as far back as 2010 that people were calling for Ainge to trade off Garnett and Pierce. But it was the right deal or no deal for Ainge.

I truly believe that if the Nets never crapped their pants, Ainge would have held on to Garnett and Pierce and we would have seen something similar to what's going on in San Antonio right now. He would have eventually gotten a player like LaMarcus Aldridge to Boston in an attempt to lift the Celtics from a still formidable team in the East (remember, Rondo was injured the year the Celtics lost to the Knicks in Round 1) to a title contender again. I firmly believe that "keeping things afloat in anticipation of getting another star" was Ainge's Plan B.

Ainge's resume

People often chalk up the 2007 Garnett trade as Ainge being lucky (read: Kevin McHale doing him a solid). But we now know that this was likely more skill than luck because we have now seen Ainge pull off an even better trade. In the past 10 years, the only better sports trade than Garnett for Al Jefferson, Ryan Gomes, Gerald Green, Theo Ratliff, Sebastian Telfair and a first round pick is Gerald Wallace, Kris Humphries, MarShon Brooks, Kris Joseph, Keith Bogans, three first round picks and the right to swap picks in 2017 in exchange for Garnett, Pierce, Jason Terry and D.J. White.

You can easily make the case that Danny Ainge has made two of the greatest sports trades this century. Doing it twice is not luck.

Ainge has also hired just two head coaches since he took over the Celtics in 2003 — Doc Rivers and Brad Stevens. Both are regarded as top five coaches in the league today.

Suns GM Ryan McDonough has already admitted that Ainge got the best of him 15 months ago when he traded Isaiah Thomas to Boston in exchange for Marcus Thornton and what will be the No. 28 pick in this year's draft.

Belichick vs. Ainge

Belichick's resume is a little more shady as we'll never get the answer as to whether or not the Patriots' dynasty is due more to him or Tom Brady. (We'll also never know for sure if it was actually Belichick who wanted to draft Brady.)

I'm of the belief that great quarterback play lifts all boats as we saw Peyton Manning get to the Super Bowl under three different head coaches, and the narrative in these parts says that Brady is superior to Manning.

As a GM, Belichick has some famous misses. Dominique Easley (first round), Ras-I Dowling (second round), Chad Jackson (second round), Jermaine Cunningham (second round), Terrance Wheatley (second round), Brandon Meriweather (first round) and Laurence Maroney (first round) were all pretty rough draft whiffs by the hooded one. Adalius Thomas, Monty Beisel, Joey Galloway, Shawn Springs, Donald Hayes and Tim Tebow are just a few of Belichick's ugly free agent signings.

As for Ainge, more often than not, he comes through on draft night. He landed Al Jefferson at pick 15, Rajon Rondo at 21, Tony Allen at 25, Ryan Gomes at 50, Avery Bradley at 19, Jared Sullinger at 21 and Big Baby Davis at 35.

He has his misses. James Young at 17 and Fab Melo at 22 jump out. But Ainge has done exceptionally well considering he's never actually made a selection in the top five of a draft.

You can argue for days about what is more difficult — sustained success in the NFL or two massive overhauls in the NBA. But I happen to believe it's the latter.

Buford vs. Ainge

Buford's selection of Kawhi Leonard at pick 15 in the 2011 draft is one of the best picks in league history and we'll even give him credit for the organization taking Tony Parker at No. 28 in 2001 (Buford was technically assistant GM at the time). Buford also landed Aldridge in free agency last summer and Ainge still hasn't lured one great free agent to Boston.

But, like Belichick, Buford has a whole lot of guilt by association to greatness going on here. The truth is, this whole Spurs thing never even gets started without the ping-pong balls falling the right way in 1997. Ron Mercer and David Robinson weren't going to get the Spurs a title in 1999 just as Drew Bledsoe and David Patten weren't going to get the Patriots a title in 2001.

At the heart of Buford and Belichick's success is great draft or draft lottery luck. Ainge is due for some draft lottery luck this Tuesday.

It's just amazing that he's gotten this far without it.

The Champs are next...

The Red Sox travel west Monday night (a 7:05 start on ESPN) to face the defending champion Royals as part of a three-game series. Rick Porcello, David Price and Steven Wright will start for Boston in Kansas City. GETTY IMAGES

Aries A disciplined approach to learning and incorporating something new into your life will help you establish a bright future. Don't fear your opponents, and don't flee change.

Taurus Joint ventures are best avoided. You'll be misled financially. Work independently on personal goals. Romance will give you added incentive to do your best.

Gemini Your expectations will fall short. Don't overreact or take on tasks that are insurmountable. Implement change behind the scenes without calling attention to your actions.

Cancer You may need a hand tending to home improvements. Offering something in return will keep everyone happy. A celebration will bring you closer to a loved one.

Leo Take on a challenge that promises to stimulate your senses and offers a peek at new possibilities, without disrupting what you've already established.

Virgo Learn as you go in order to get twice as much accomplished. An optimistic attitude will help you drum up any assistance you require. Personal gains are attainable.

Libra Good luck and solid prospects will develop through encounters you make while networking. Project energy and take a direct approach when dealing with others.

Scorpio You will want to dabble in subjects and philosophies that will take you to unfamiliar territory. Someone you meet along the way will motivate you to initiate personal change.

Sagittarius Do things your way, and don't let anyone persuade you to put him or her first. Once you have everything in its place and are happy with what you've done, offer help.

Capricorn You have great ideas and the energy needed to put them in action. Personal issues and concerns can be dealt with, and changes that will enhance your looks are encouraged.

Aquarius Relationships will suffer if you let your job come between you and promises you've made someone. Enforce changes that will allow you to accommodate your responsibilities.

Pisces Reflect on days gone by and remember the people who brought you joy. Reconnecting with old friends or establishing new rules to improve a relationship will work. EUGENIA LAST
